hereafter. Now, I have a large heart, and it admires beauty of all kinds, but particularly in women. Well, you may form some idea of my disgust when I tell you that with the care exception mentioned above, I've traveled all day with about the ugliest parcel of women I ever saw. They were in the care this morning, and every accession but increased the number, until I began to think that Tennessee and Kentucky were parading that Tennessee and Kentucky were parading all their ugly women on that train for my special inspection, or else they were going to a fair to compete for a prize. After awhile one dainty little widow (I judged she was a widow, because of her "weeds") tripped in and took a seat, and I began to think there was one redeeming ingredient in the crowd at last. The first time the wind blew her veil aside the illusion aside the illusio was as the rest of them. One

If Mark Twain had been aboard of that car expected that she would 'throw up her immortal soul," and she may have done it after I left the train at Guthrie, for aught that I know. At least, I feel quite configure that I know. At least, I feel quite confrient there was very little more left to be thrown up, cven when I witnessed her last agony, and I don't think she was done. I'll never forget her as long as I live, for, anticipating an excellent breakfast at Erin (where I never find the gathering. On crossing the mountain south of Tuscumbia they had not suffered as much from the drouth as we had, but their corn had been greatly damaged, but cotton would yield a very fair average. But I tell you, my peace and my appetite. But I tell you, memory is something we can no more control than we can control the Mississippi river. We may "forgive," but it's a different thing and a great deal harder to "forget." But to be very frank, I am afraid I didn't try hard to do either in this instance. I'm out six bits, and that old lady ought to reimburse me, but, even then, I don't know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of a good know that I could forget the least of the least of Iron Cotton Ties Is view of the constantly increasing popularity and demand for the celebrated ARROW TIE, the universally recognized favorite to of Planters, Cotton Pressmen and shippers of cotton generally, the McComb Tie Company, of New York, sole proprietors and manufacturers of said Tie, commanding unequaled facilities, have, in addition to their large stock on hand, contracted for increased quantities, sufficient to meet the largest demand for Cotton Ties to cover the entire crop of the coming season, and now, through their Agents gonerally, offer the popular and irrepressible ARROW TIE at the lowest market price, in bundles complete, it being the purpose of the Company to merit the continued patronage of the planting community, and defy all competition that may arise. The buckles are now securely riveted to the band, thus preventing the loss of same in shipping, and making a stronger Tie.

For Sale by all Wholesale Grocers and Cotton Factors.
